

Statutory Redundancy Payments - factsheet

The amount of statutory redundancy pay (SRP) depends on the employee's age and length of service (up to a maximum of twenty years) as at the date the notice period will expire. This determines the number of weeks' pay due, which is then subject to a statutory limit on weekly pay. The limit is reviewed annually by the Government. The current rate can be found on the gov.uk website. SRP is exempt from tax and NI deductions up to £30,000.

The amount is calculated as follows:

- years worked up to the age of 22: 0.5 week's pay for each completed year of service
- years worked whilst aged 22 up to 41: 1 week's pay for each completed year of service
- years worked when 41+ years of age: 1.5 weeks' pay for each completed year of service.

The maximum number of weeks is 30. Employees with under 2 years' service are not entitled to SRP.

To calculate the statutory number of weeks' pay:

1. Calculate the date the employee's contract will end, if you are requiring the employee to work out his/her full contractual notice period. This will be the 'Relevant Date' at which you work out the employee's length of service and age.
2. If you are intending to give pay in lieu for some or all of the notice period, then for the purposes of calculating the SRP only, extend the date the notice of dismissal is served by the amount of statutory notice to which the employee is entitled, to give you the 'Relevant Date'. Minimum statutory notice periods commence after one month's continuous employment, with one week's notice for up to the first two years' of service and then one week for each complete year of service thereafter up to a maximum of twelve weeks. (This can have the effect of bringing an employee within the two-year provision or adding a year of continuous service where a birthday or anniversary of joining falls within this period.)
3. Use the table below to read off the employee's age and number of complete years' service as at the 'Relevant Date'. This tells you the number of weeks' pay the employee is entitled to.
